WELCOME!

The initial impetus for this conference was commemoration of the 1864 Charlottetown Conference, which is acknowledged as the first official step on the road to Confederation. However, this conference, the latest of a series on the teaching of Canadian history organized by the Association for Canadian Studies over the past decade or so, goes beyond commemoration, examining the relationship between commemoration, history, and history education. Like the previous conferences, this event brings together a wide range of stakeholders in history education, including historians, history education scholars, museum educators, archivists, representatives of public history organizations, history teachers, and policy-makers. However, a unique aspect of this event is the involvement of high school students. The Guardians of Confederation, a youth leadership conference, which runs concurrently, brings together students from Prince Edward Island high schools with students from each of the provinces and territories. Their task is to consider the historical making of Canadian Confederation and to emerge with a new vision for confederation. The other special aspect of this event is the annual Symons lecture on the State of Canadian Confederation, to which our conference attendees are invited. Historical consciousness involves consideration of the past in order to inform both our understanding of the present and our decisions about the future. If ever there was an opportunity to raise our historical consciousness, this is it. WELCOME!

8. De-Constructing Cabinets of Curiosity: (Re) Imagining Community History Museums

Session to be held at the Confederation Center for the Arts (Upper East Art Gallery) – You must sign up for this session in advance at the conference registration desk.

In this workshop participants will be actively involved in experiencing, re-examining, and re-constructing a museum exhibition. Methods such as historic space mapping and material history analysis will be explored as teaching tools that enable hands-on learning. Participants will have an opportunity to experience the Canadian Textile Museum exhibition Dreamland: Textiles and the Canadian Landscapes, exhibited in the Confederation Centre for the Arts. In so doing, they will examine the artifact collection, reflect upon the narratives they encounter, and re-consider how history museum exhibits could be adapted for their own classroom use. The practical knowledge and skills gained from this workshop will be beneficial for those interested in project-based learning, problem-based learning, and historical thinking in museums.

JOHNSON ROOM

This National Film Board of Canada (NFB) media literacy session will introduce educators to documentary titles and educational materials aimed at facilitating discussions surrounding histories of Canadian identities across diverse communities. In an effort to encourage digital literacies within classrooms, the NFB’s education department has recently launched its educational screening room, CAMPUS, featuring over 3,000 on-demand, classroom-ready films, pedagogical evaluations of NFB films and a wide variety of online learning tools, available in both English and French. We will demonstrate how CAMPUS has been used by educators across Canada. This session will be framed as a viewing and working session, encouraging participant discussion and feedback.
